Crossing Borders: Environment, Futurity and Migration
Prof. Dr. Hermann Wittenberg
University of the Western Cape,
South Africa

The sustainability of the biosphere, the evolving nature of being human in the digital age, and a concern with global justice are questions that increasingly shape contemporary debates. This course examines a diversity of both textual and visual cultural forms that engage with these questions, focusing on the idea of the border.

Culture, Identity, Globalization
Prof. Gregory J. Lobo, Ph.D.
Universidad de los Andes, Colombia

This course will explore the links between globalization and the loss of traditional cultural paradigms for identity. We will debate the decay of identity borders, which allows opting into and out of gendered, sexual, tribal and even class and national identifications that, once upon a time, we inherited as destiny, as fate.

Crossing Borders through Communication Technologies - Then and Now
Prof. Christine McWebb, Ph.D.
University of Waterloo, Canada

In this course, we will look at key moments in Western history, in which information technologies enabled the crossing of social and geographical borders. We will focus on the printing press of Renaissance Europe, early cinema and photography, and the current digital technologies of the interactive internet and virtuality.

Intercultural Encounters in German and Austrian Cinema
Prof. Dr. Thomas Wortmann
University of Mannheim, Germany

This seminar asks how German and Austrian films deal with questions of identity by establishing intercultural encounters. While there will be some sessions on film history classics, the course will mainly focus on contemporary cinema –and, yes, even German comedies. All films are available with English subtitles.

Foodways and Borderlands Cultures: American and European Perspectives
Prof. Elizabeth Duclos-Orsello, Ph.D.
Salem State University, USA

This course focuses on borderlands regions in the U.S. and Europe. Through the work of poets, novelists, food scientists, historians, cultural critics, ethnographers, filmmakers, and chefs we will explore theories of borderlands culture, place-making and hybridity. We will examine the foodways of Mannheim itself and do some cooking!
